independent of the mesh size. because the reynolds number is small, the n-s equations are just a small perturbation of the stokes equations. domain decomposition methods for reaction-diffusion systems - abstract domain decomposition (dd) methods have been successfully used to solve elliptic prob-lems, as they deal with them in a more elegant and efficient way than other existing domain decomposition methods - decomposition methods are the schur complement method and the finite element tearing and interconnecting (feti) method. the execution time and speedup of these parallel finite element methods have been compared to each other and to the sequential one.
